Francis Holland Sloane Square became a 'Dot School' in the summer – hosting the first ever cross-generational Hub Dot event. Hub Dot is a global movement that connects women through storytelling. Founded in 2012, it has grown from a coffee morning to a worldwide phenomenon that now numbers more than 14,000 members. In the first event of its kind, mothers and daughters, students and teachers joined together at

“It was an evening of storytelling and sharing wisdom across generations”

Francis Holland Sloane Square for an evening of storytelling and sharing wisdom across generations. It was a celebration of inspirational stories and role models around a variety of topics from tech entrepreneurship to reinvention and ideas that are making the world a happier place. And, like all Hub Dot events, there were plenty of opportunities to connect.

Headmistress, Mrs Lucy Elphinstone says, “There is a powerful alchemy that comes from enterprising women telling their stories and making connections. We are proud to be the first school to host a Hub

Dot event and excited at the opportunities this gives our students to be inspired by the creativity and courage which bring success.” [Ⓔ]
