The Lonely Goose

In summer, I go to a cottage in East Sussex. In the evening, I lie on the grass and look at the sky. Many geese fly by but occasionally, a single goose flies by. At night before I fall asleep, I wonder if the goose found its flock.

Mountain

The viewer feels like they are being taken on a journey to a completely different world to ours. They will meet unknown creatures, large or small, whilst sailing in the rough waves. I used water colour as I thought it would be an effortless way to show different textures throughout the painting, such as the wooden panels on the bottom of the boat to the curves and strong current of the waves. They will feel like being in a dream as they are being taken on an adventure with no end, eyes set on the calming pink mountain, creatures jumping over their head and fighting against mysterious beings, surrounded with soaring waves and unrealistic sea life, introducing them to things they have never seen before.

A Fantasy World

This artwork connects to the theme "When I close my eyes" as I dream of a fantasy world that can only exist in my imagination. This piece is from one of my favourite tv shows and it is a world that I envy to be in, with vast landscapes and the ability to control the different elements. This building is called the Southern Air Temple, and its past morals were peace and tranquility, while living a simple yet balanced lifestyle, living a life full of kindness. I did not only paint this scene for its landscapes but also for its morals.
